Redefining Development: The Extraordinary Genesis of the Sustainable Development Goals

Paula Caballero with Patti Londoño

“Bridging the worlds of academia and practice, Caballero and Londoño provide illuminative insights on the role of small countries in shaping the UN development agenda in the broader context of the informal processes of multilateral diplomacy.” —Jacques Fomerand, former director, UNU Office in North America

“This once-in-a-generation detailed insider’s look at how a critically important UN decision was made will be valuable to both scholars and students.”

This extraordinary first-person story of what can be achieved through informal diplomacy traces the improbably successful struggle to achieve acceptance of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)—and thus transform the global development agenda—against all odds.

Moving from the framing of the SDGs concept through the entire negotiation process (including a trove of key documents), Paula Caballero and Patti Londoño’s vibrant narrative provides rare insight into informal diplomacy and multilateralism in action. Their insiders’ account provides a unique perspective on how global movements and agendas can be built and impelled forward. Not least, it also serves to prove that just a few committed individuals can generate radical change.

During the period covered in this book, Paula Caballero was director for economic, social, and environmental affairs, and Patti Londoño was vice minister for multilateral affairs in the Colombian Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Practicing Development: Upending Assumptions for Positive Change

Susan H. Holcombe and Marion Howard, editors

“Thoughtfully examines the evolution, practice, and impact of the international development industry from the perspective of seasoned practitioners and educators from both the North and the South.” —Jennifer Brinkerhoff, George Washington University

Practicing Development bridges the gap between academia and the world of practice to address challenges and propose concrete steps toward more equitable, effective, and sustainable development.

The authors draw from their on-the-ground experiences as they discuss what “development” is, how to attain it, and what their findings mean for the funding and practice of development efforts. Often challenging conventional wisdom, they provide a range of concrete examples of innovation, responsiveness, and sustainability—and perhaps most important, explore how practitioners might be better educated to achieve positive change.

Susan H. Holcombe and Marion Howard are professors emerita of the practice at Brandeis University’s Heller School for Social Policy and Management.

How the Aid Industry Works: The Politics and Practice of International Development

Arjan de Haan

Praise for the 1st edition:

“De Haan has a real talent for encapsulating large and complex topics in the span of a few pages and therefore manages to achieve near-comprehensive treatment within the covers of a modest-sized book.” —Development Policy Review

“In a field dominated by one-sided pro- or anti-aid polemics, de Haan adds some much-needed substance by setting out the nuts and bolts of how aid actually works.... An invaluable introduction.” —Duncan Green, Oxfam

“A much welcome volume that goes beyond ‘whether’ aid works to help us understand ‘how’ the aid industry works.” —Sakiko Fukuda-Parr, The New School University

International development assistance—what Arjan de Haan calls the aid industry—continues to be critical for overcoming the world’s development challenges, perhaps more so than ever given the global realities of climate change and the Covid pandemic. But how does this industry actually work? What practices does it follow, and to what effect? De Haan addresses these questions, providing a concise introduction to the business of development.

This new edition reflects fifteen years of increasing complexity in the aid industry: heightened polarized debates about appropriate approaches; the involvement of new donors, such as China; adoption of the Sustainable Development Goals; the blending of public- and private-sector investment; tensions among charitable, political, and commercial considerations. The list goes on. De Haan incorporates these factors in a succinct overview that is an ideal introduction for students encountering the subject of development for the first time, as well as a handy overview for development practitioners.

Arjan de Haan is a senior program specialist at the International Development Research Centre (IDRC).

3RD EDITION
Understanding Development: Theory and Practice in the Third World

John Rapley

Praise for the previous editions:

“Concise, yet all encompassing and meticulously referenced.... Rapley’s study is determined to unravel the intricacies of development practice across the third world and map out its intellectual roots. The project certainly succeeds in these goals.”
—Firooz Pavri, Progress in Development Studies

“Emphasizing a close link between development theory and the actual practice of economic policymaking, Rapley grounds the discussion in a way that will be much appreciated by both students and their instructors.... [He] writes with a rare clarity.”
—Bruce E. Moon, American Political Science Review

This lucidly written book provides both an assessment of the state of development theory and an extensive survey of the impact of evolving policies and practices throughout the developing world.

John Rapley is academic visitor at the Centre of Development Studies, University of Cambridge.

Class Dynamics of Agrarian Change

Henry Bernstein

“The most sweeping, original, and discerning class analysis of agrarian history in many decades ... essential reading for any and all agraristas both inside and outside the academy.”
—James C. Scott, Yale University

“Bernstein shows that a ‘little book’ can be a tour de force. Decades of scholarship are lightly worn and compellingly revealed in this treasure chest of a book. It should be essential reading for all development students (whatever age) and activists (wherever they work).”
—Barbara Harriss-White, University of Oxford

Henry Bernstein argues that class dynamics should be the starting point of any analysis of agrarian change. Providing an accessible introduction to agrarian political economy, he shows clearly how the argument for “bringing class back in” provides an alternative to inherited conceptions of the agrarian question. He also ably illustrates what is at stake in different ways of thinking about class dynamics and the effects of agrarian change in today’s globalized world.

Henry Bernstein is professor emeritus of development studies at the University of London’s School of Oriental and African Studies.

CONTENTS: Introduction: The Political Economy of Agrarian Change. Production and Productivity. Origins of Early Development of Capitalism. Colonialism and Capitalism. Just Give Money to the Poor: The Development Revolution from the Global South

Joseph Hanlon, Armando Barrientos, and David Hulme

“This is a book that we have been waiting for.... [The authors] present the evidence with clarity and brio, and place it in a suitably big historical and ethical framework concerning the evolution of attitudes of the monied towards ‘the poor,’ within countries and between countries.”
—Des Gasper, International Institute of Social Studies

Amid all the complicated economic theories about the causes and solutions to poverty, one idea is so basic that it seems radical: bypass governments and NGOs, provide direct cash transfers, and let the poor decide how to use their money. Discussing this alternative, looking at both problems and successes and stressing that cash transfers are neither charity nor a safety net, the authors provide a compelling overview of practices that actually work.

Joseph Hanlon is senior lecturer in development policy and practice at the Open University. Armando Barrientos is professor and research director at the Brooks World Poverty Institute and senior researcher at the Chronic Poverty Research Centre, University of Manchester. David Hulme is professor of development studies and founder-director of the Chronic Poverty Research Centre and the Brooks World Poverty Institute, University of Manchester.

6TH EDITION
The World Food Problem: Toward Understanding and Ending Undernutrition in the Developing World

Howard D. Leathers and Kenneth L. Leonard

Praise for the previous editions:

“Why are there still approximately 1 billion people who do not have food security? This excellent book ... gives the facts, explains the causes and suggests mitigating policies.” —Richard Strange, Food Security

“An important addition to the reading list for economic courses on the world food problem.” —Roland Herrmann, Australian Journal of Agricultural and Resource Economics

“A fine book, which should be widely adopted as a text for world food courses.”
—George J. Viksnins, Journal of Developing Areas

Continuing in the tradition of its acclaimed predecessors, the sixth edition of The World Food Problem reflects “a boldly multidisciplinary approach that captures all the complexity of the causes of, and solutions to, hunger ... in an engaging and often witty manner that is simple but never simplistic” (Mark G. Cohen, Hunger Notes).

Updated information and new case studies throughout this edition reflect the latest research, new policy directions, and the significant impact of the Covid-19 pandemic on agriculture, poverty, and hunger. There are also expanded discussions of developments in India and Africa, reflecting the decades-long experience of the text’s new coauthor, Kenneth Leonard.

The result is an accessible, comprehensive text, as well as a provocative assessment of prospects for the future.

Howard D. Leathers is associate professor emeritus of agricultural and resource economics and Kenneth L. Leonard is professor of agricultural and resource economics at the University of Maryland, College Park.

2ND EDITION
Women and Development in Africa: How Gender Works

Michael Kevane

Praise for the 1st edition:

“A unique and rare book. It is a welcome addition to the literature on women and development.... Kevane challenges economists and scholars of development to ask better questions, develop well-informed hypotheses, adopt more rigorous methods, and test their assumptions through solid empirical research.”
 —Aili Mari Tripp, Politics & Gender

“This book fills an important niche.... It would be an excellent supplemental reader for many undergraduate courses on women and Africa.”
 —Cheryl R. Doss, Feminist Economics

Michael Kevane provides a broad overview of the sources of underdevelopment in Africa and the role of gender in economic transactions, as well as a cogent analysis of the gendered realities of such issues as land rights, the control of labor, the marriage market, health care, education, and political representation.

Michael Kevane is associate professor of economics at Santa Clara University.

Equitable Rural Socioeconomic Change: Land, Climate Dynamics, Technological Innovation

Peter T. Jacobs, editor

How valid are the dominant theories about the nature of rural livelihoods? How can the intricacies of the economic and social transformations that are unfolding in the rural areas of developing countries best be understood?

The authors of Equitable Rural Socioeconomic Change address these questions as they explore the interrelated themes of land inequality, climate dynamics, and technological innovation across varied rural landscapes, primarily in South Africa, but also in Rwanda, and Brazil.

Peter T. Jacobs is research director of the Economic Performance and Development Programme at the the Human Sciences Research Council.

The New Politics of Aid: Emerging Donors and Conflict-Affected States

Agnieszka Paczyńska, editor

How do emerging donors (e.g., China, India, Russia, South Africa) conceptualize the relationship between security and development? How, and why, do the policies they pursue differ from those of traditional donors? Addressing these questions, the authors of The New Politics of Aid shed light on the increasingly complicated and complex donor landscape.
